Industry Update— WINDLOG, BRAZIL

Cargo insurance helps to avoid losses in international transportation

When world logistics is undergoing transformations, and the Brazilian trade balance continues to be heated, ensuring maximum security and the certainty of the transport service quality has become even more fundamental. All goods transported internationally are subject to numerous risks such as theft, accidents, damage, and malfunctions, among other factors that cause considerable financial losses to those involved, and contractual and commercial wear and tear.

"The hiring of international insurance is very simple and very low cost, considering the guarantees and tranquility to importers, allowing coverage in the CIF values of the goods, taxes, duties, and profit loss. Companies that import through the Incoterms EX WORKS, FCA, FOB, CFR, and CPT and choose not to contract the international insurance will not be able to transfer to the transporters such as Shipowners, Airlines, Cargo Agents, among others, any financial, contractual or legal losses due to accidents, losses or theft occurred during the transportation of the goods", explains Mauricio Welsh Carboni, commercial director of Windlog, a company specialized in logistics.

International insurance is mandatory in foreign trade, and it is up to the importer or exporter, through the INCOTERM signed between parties, to contract it correctly and professionally.

Cargo insurance helps to avoid losses in international transportation

"The issuing of the insurance policy must faithfully follow the information contained in the commercial invoice, negotiated INCOTERM, technical data of the cargo, value, and types of coverage being: (CIF) - (CIF + 10%) - (CIF + 10% + Taxes) - (CIF + 10% + taxes + lost profit). The insurance company must previously analyze all merchandise to obtain approval for shipment and the percentage approved for coverage. The countries involved in the loading and unloading the cargo must also be previously consulted due to possible international embargoes, war scenarios, strikes, riots, among others", says the director.

Fires on board ships are among the most significant safety problems for the maritime industry. According to an analysis in Allianz Global Corporate & Specialty's (AGCS) annual report, Safety & Shipping Review, the number of fires on board large vessels has increased significantly in recent years. There were a record 40 cargo-related fire incidents in 2019 alone or once every ten days. Across all vessel types, the number of fires or explosions resulting in total losses was 10 incidents at the end of 2020, representing about one in five total losses worldwide.

Cargo insurance helps to avoid losses in international transportation.

Last February, there was the case of the ro-ro ship "Felicity Ace Cargo," which caught fire in the Atlantic Ocean while carrying thousands of cars, including luxury models. Another example was the collapse of two containers from a ship docked at the Port of Santos on the coast of São Paulo last April. One of them toppled onto the pier and the other into the water, causing damage.

Climatic, handling and static factors in maritime, air, and road modals can affect the integrity of goods during transportation. In addition, it is necessary to check with the exporter if the goods have been properly packed for the means of transport being used.

Many companies use packaging from the "domestic" market to the international market without preliminary technical analysis of fatigue, temperature, and stacking, among other factors, increasing the possibility of eventual claims.

It is essential to secure cargo insurance to guard against accidents and obtain greater security when performing logistical operations. Before contracting, it is necessary to consider some aspects.

Commercial Director

"Acting as an International Insurance Stipulator, Windlog offers complete and reliable assistance in contracting insurance in all modes, in export and import, with the issuance of insurance certificates by shipment, providing agility, safety in transportation and management to customers, especially in "door-to-door" processes, concludes Carboni.

Latest Shanghai quarantines add more pressure to global supply chain

The mass quarantine measures imposed this past weekend in Shanghai, including highway closures, severely affected trucks carrying exports bound for the city's port, according to logistics company Orient Star Group.

By Lori Ann LaRocco

"Many clients have no choice but to change the loading ports to Ningbo or other small ports along the Yangtze River."

The Port of Ningbo is now showing an increase in congestion since Covid cases keep showing up in certain Shanghai districts.

"Production and manufacturing are basically resumed in Shanghai, but once there are quarantines, transportation and drayage are affected to a certain extent," Orient Star Group said.

During the lockdown, the slowdown in trucking led to raw material shortages for companies such as Volkswagen and Tesla. Before the latest restrictions, truck drivers were still required to provide a nationally recognized 48-hour negative Covid test result and traffic permit, said Akil Nair, Seko Logistics' vice president of global carrier management and ocean strategy for Asia-Pacific. In practice, he said many local governments have also demanded that tests be retaken locally and on highways.

"Some drivers are cautious about delivering into Shanghai and capacity has yet to fully recover to pre-lockdown volumes," he said.

U.S. ports feel the pinch

The increase in West Coast cargo comes at a time when ports in the West are slowly processing import containers due to a lack of rail options and trucks being used as makeshift warehouses.

Congestion at the ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach, California, has affected the Port of Oakland, California, which has been skipped by the ocean carriers that are looking to make up time on their schedules. This is having an impact on the amount of U.S. export containers leaving the port.

“Congestion measured in the number of waiting cargo vessels outside major ports is now worse on the East and Gulf coasts than on the West Coast, a major shift compared to the start of 2022,” said Mirko Woitzik, director of intelligence solutions at Everstream Analytics.

To keep up with growing container volume, the Port of Houston recently announced gate hours on Saturdays for the rest of the year. Warehouses at the Port of Savannah, Georgia, are 99% full and are using their pop-up container storage lots to free up land capacity.

“2022 is showing us that East Coast ports are just as susceptible to congestion,” said Brian Bourke, chief growth officer of Project44.

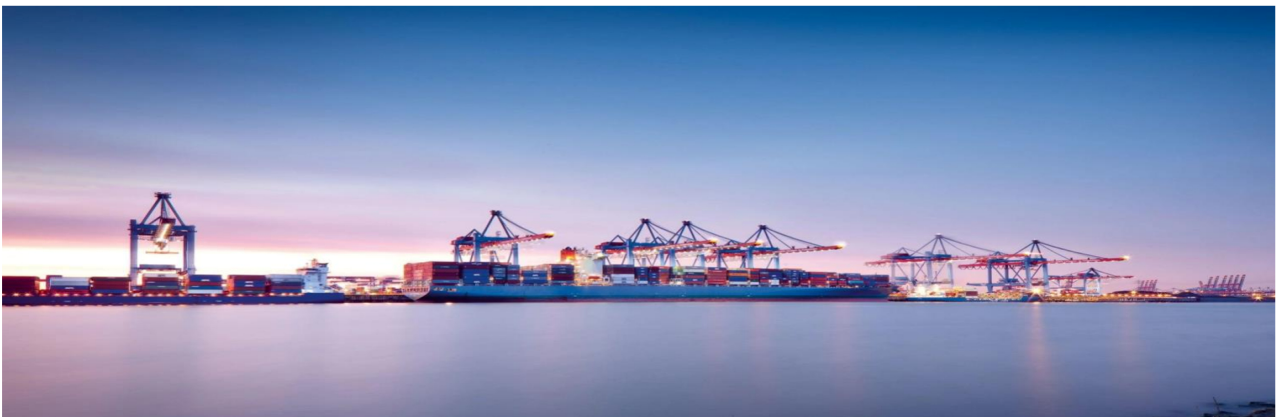

Europe labor strife

Last week, a union of port operators in Germany followed through on its “warning strike” that disrupted one of the afternoon shifts at the ports of Emden, Bremen, Bremerhaven and Wilhelmshaven.

Negotiations continue between the union ver.di, which represents about 70% of the port workforce, and the Central Association of German Seaport Companies.

The system is already under strain and any loss of manpower will only add to the congestion, said Andreas Braun, ocean product director EMEA at Crane Worldwide Logistics.

“Feeder operators see up to five days of delays waiting for berth to pick up their containers, and round trips between Rotterdam – Dublin – Rotterdam has increased from six to nine days. More vessels need to be injected by the feeder operators to keep the schedule somehow reliable,” Braun said. Rotterdam is in the Netherlands.
