SHANGHAI AIRFREIGHT OPERATIONS
“BACK TO NORMAL”

According to Flexport, Covid is on the rise again in Shanghai but "there has been no impact on airfreight" so far, and turnover at Shanghai Pudong Airport (PVG) has increased.

The freight forwarder said that trucking is still unaffected by the surge in instances in a freight market update on July 12. Pudong Airport's daily tonnage turnover has already surpassed pre-lockdown levels, according to Flexport.

According to the Shanghai Airport Authority, the first week of July saw a return to normalcy in the average daily frequency of cargo flights and freight quantities at Shanghai Pudong

Due to the two-month lockdown in Shanghai, planes were banned, factories and warehouses were closed, and vehicles were not allowed on the roads, which had an adverse effect on Shanghai Pudong.

The number of cargo flights at the airport has increased since June, according to the airport authority. Late in June, Shanghai Pudong recorded 232 cargo flights per day on average, with an average throughput of 9,134 tons. These numbers were up 33 and 28%, respectively, over the same time in May.

During this time, a daily record of 253 freight flights with a throughput of 10,797 tons per day was achieved.

The airport now hosts cargo flights from 58 Chinese and international airlines, with air routes connecting 68 locations worldwide.

China*Article 3*China's first "professional cargo hub airport" Ezhou Huahu
Airport has begun operations

On the morning of July 17, a SF Airlines 767-300 freighter departed from the airport to launch the new operations at Ezhou Huahu.

According to China's official news agency Xinhua, the airport in the Hubei Province in central China is the continent's first professional freight hub airport.

To increase the effectiveness of airfreight delivery, the new airport has two runways, an approximately 700,000 square meter freight transit center, and a 23,000 square meter cargo terminal.

The Ezhou Huahu Airport's primary line of business will be freight, and it will also serve as the home base for a major air cargo company, in this case, SF Express.

SF Express, a supplier of logistics services, owns a 46% share in Hubei International Logistics Airport Co., Ltd., the company in charge of running Ezhou Huahu Airport.

At the new airport, SF has separately constructed the cargo sorting facility, the transit center for freight transportation, and the aircraft base. In the future, SF Express intends to do the majority of its package processing at the new airport.

Market Update—Premiere Logistics Ltd, China

According to Pan Le, head of the airport's IT division, "as a cargo center, Ezhou Huazhu Airport will assist SF Express to establish a new comprehensive logistics network." Within this year, the airport will introduce international routes linking with Osaka in Japan and Frankfurt in Germany. The airport has already started two cargo routes to Shenzhen and Shanghai.

By 2025, it's anticipated that about 10 international and 50 domestic cargo routes would be operational, with a throughput of 2.45 million tons of air cargo and mail.

The project team for the airport has filed more than 70 patent and copyright applications for cutting-edge technologies that will make the new airport safer, greener, and smarter, including 5G, big data, cloud computing, and artificial intelligence.

Also being invested on is automation. Le stated, "We've tested autonomous vehicles in defined sections on the apron for over a year with the intention of constructing an unmanned apron in the future."
