ECU Worldwide celebrates its 15th anniversary

ECU Worldwide México celebrated its 15th anniversary sharing with clients and collaborators, where Francisco Martínez, general director of this firm, highlighted that all the services they offer have been flowing in the right direction in the country. In the evening they shared, during his speech, the manager pointed out that the 15 years they are celebrating have worked to improve their services.

He announced that the new improvement they are working on at the moment is that all operations globally have the same standard of service in operations, sales, and administration. "We are working hard on that and it has to be reflected in the quality of service that we can offer customers," he assured. He mentioned that another important point is that in Mexico they are working on the development of Air Services a new LCL direct traffic, specifically in the port of Lázaro Cárdenas, where they largely operate, which has forced them to improve the service. He commented that in the port they operate three days a week, however, they have just finished negotiations so that in the next few days they will start operating five days a week, which will be reflected in the average times of their operations. He also highlighted that in Ensenada they have three direct services and that they are also in negotiations to achieve more space in warehouses to increase the competitiveness of the company in that region.

Understand the impact of increasing CO2 emissions on the planet; how Windlog initiated the transition to a low-carbon economy

Windlog starts inventory of greenhouse gas emissions

Windlog recognizes its role in the transition to a low-carbon economy and, as a first step, seeks a deep, data-based understanding of its activities and their broader potential effects.

At the beginning of 2022, it started the greenhouse gas emissions inventory that quantifies these gases produced directly and indirectly by the company's activities.

With the results finalized, the next step will be to identify the impact of each activity and prioritize actions to avoid, eliminate and reduce the associated emissions.

"Including sustainability, as an integrated pillar in the corporate strategy, proves to be profitable, as a company committed to environmental issues attracts investors, stands out from its competitors, and generates credibility with its consumers," explains the Operational Export Director, Gregorio Gheorghiu.

Thus, far beyond the competitive advantage, decarbonization of the economy is a plan that must be disseminated systemically by all fields of society.

Business Update— WINDLOG, BRAZIL*Understand the impact of increasing CO2 emissions on the planet;
how Windlog initiated the transition to a low-carbon economy*How rising CO2 emissions have impacted the planet

According to a report by the International Energy Agency (IEA), the world has reached the highest annual level of energy-related CO2 emissions in history.

The leading cause is burning coal for energy generation, worsening with the resumption of economic activities after the Covid-19 pandemic. CO2, responsible for absorbing heat from the sun's rays and maintaining the atmosphere's average temperature, is essential for life on earth.

However, the problem is when this concentration increases unbalanced, causing global warming.

They are the main responsible: the industry and the means of transport are the ones that emit the most CO2.

UN issues warning to reduce CO2 emissions

According to a study by the University of East Anglia in England, limiting global temperature to 1.5°C increases the risks of a climate catastrophe by up to 85%.

For this, the United Nations (UN), through the scientists that make up the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC), says it is necessary to reduce global CO2 emissions by 45% compared to 2010 levels by 2030, reaching the "net zero" around 2050.

Industry Update

Envirotainer heavily invests and expands capacity

Envirotainer has extensively expanded its production site in Rosersberg, just north of Stockholm.

This is in response to incredibly high demand for secure, temperature-controlled units to transport vital medicines around the globe. This year alone, the business will add annual shipping capacity of ~200 million more doses. By the end of 2022, Envirotainer will be capable of shipping over one billion vials per year.

This site is the largest in the world in terms of output, able to build more units each year than any other. It's also been designed to allow further expansion in the future.

The Envirotainer fleet covers more than 2,000 pharmaceutical trade lanes in over 100 countries and 300 airports. As the market leader, the business recognises its responsibility to meet the growing need for ways to move ever-increasing volumes of vaccines and treatments such as insulin to where they're needed.

Its services help pharma companies meet the strictest requirements in pharmaceutical air freight and include the new Releye® RAP and RLP models, which are the largest and most advanced of their type on the market, combining high capacity with superior features.

"The demand for our services has been sky-high since the start of the pandemic. The need to safely transport pharmaceuticals while minimising wasted space in precious air cargo has increased dramatically," Sofie Nordhamren, Head of Quality Control and Production Manager at Envirotainer said.

"The added capacity will help our customers be more efficient, sustainable, and reduce the likelihood of a temperature deviation to virtually zero. This nearly eliminates the likelihood of valuable product loss."

From Covid-19 Highs, Shanghai's Ocean Freight Prices were trapped in Free Fall

Due to the change in the supply-demand balance, sea freight rates for containers departing Shanghai have fallen by as much as 90% from all-time highs reached when the epidemic disrupted supplies of Chinese goods in high demand from abroad. Economists expected that situation would be worse because of the gloomy economic outlook.

Shanghai shipping companies are now charging about US$2,000 to ship a 20-foot equivalent container to the US West Coast, down from a high of US$20,000 in the summer of 2021, according to regional freight forwarders.

As said by Lu Ming, an agent of the Shanghai Ocean Shipping Agency, "It has become a buyers' market as ocean carriers now have to work hard to attract cargo owners". Industry executives are concerned about the market's future.

Although the current rate is up to 80% lower than in April, when Shanghai's city-wide lockdown triggered port congestion that clogged global supply chains, it is still twice before pandemic.

Mr. Xiong Hao, Assistant General Manager of Shanghai Jump International Shipping indicates, "Shippers made a killing over the past three years, but they may not be able to make a profit given the current freight rates."

The lofty freight rates between 2020 and the beginning of this year is described as "windfall" brought by the Covid-19 pandemic. In June 2020, China became the world's first major economy emerged from coronavirus lockdowns, quickly regaining its status as the world's factory and ramping up production to meet pent-up global demand.

Market Update—Premiere Logistics Ltd, China

However, the uneven distribution of containers at major ports around the world has been a headache for exporters. They either had to pay thousands of dollars extra to reserve a shipping space immediately, or wait weeks for the goods to be transported.

On the other hand, the uneven distribution of containers at major ports around the world has been a headache for exporters. They either had to pay thousands of dollars extra to reserve a shipping space immediately, or wait weeks for the goods to be transported.

In August 2021, a peak season for ocean transport with Chinese-made goods bound for the US and Europe ahead of Christmas, container slots were often fought over by dozens of exporters who were willing to pay as much as 10 times the normal freight rates to ship their cargo abroad.

The container freight index compiled by the Shanghai Shipping Exchange has dropped by 45.5% this year.

The mainland's zero-Covid policy has remained a stumbling block to the free cross-border flow of goods and capital.

In September, China's exports grew to $322.8 billion, custom data showed, way down from the rise of 20% recorded in the same period a year ago.
